Overview of the sector

The livelihoods and resilience sector's aim is to ensure that refugees and asylum seekers live peacefully with their host communities, and progressively attain self-reliance in a conducive environment for sustainable livelihoods. In the first quarter, partners supported refugees to access arable land, provided training in good agricultural practices, and agricultural technologies to enable them to plant mainly food crops for the first season of the year. In addition, partners also supported refugees and host community groups to access produce markets. Additional training on entrepreneurship, financial literacy and group dynamics.

Challenges: Despite the efforts to enhance refugee self-reliance, food insecurity remains a challenge as about 68% of refugee households were reported to be food insecure. This is due to effects of climate change resulting in poor crop harvests and limited access to sufficient arable land. Moreover, funding for the sector declined by about 51% in 2024. The expected impact of the reduced funding is that there is a risk of reversal of the gains made in self-reliance. Over 40% refugees in category 2 could slide back to higher vulnerability (Category 1) because they cannot sustain the activities that provide food and income for their households worsening their vulnerability situation. The reduced funding could also result in at least 60% of refugees who depend on agricultural livelihoods not getting support to undertake agricultural production activities in a timely manner, hence limiting their capacity to produce their own food and generate income.

Key Priorities: To mitigate duplication of refugee livelihoods efforts, UNHCR is training livelihood partners in recording assistance data. This data will be consolidated into ProGres v4 for sharing with partners to support their programing, targeting exercises and development of funding proposals. The sector will also continue to advocate for multi-year funding, strengthen thematic coordination around key sector priorities of graduation, value chains, market systems development, and skills & entrepreneurship at both national and settlement level.
