Context – Cross-Border Movements into Chad

Since the latest attack in El Fasher on 24 October, 7,648 new arrivals from 2,767 families have been recorded in Chad. Breakdown by entry points:

- 61% (4,692 individuals from 1,516 families) entered through Oure Cassoni – Bahai and Kariari (Ennedi East).
- 28% (2,153 individuals from 899 families) crossed via Tiné (Wadi Fira).
- 10% (803 individuals from 352 families) arrived through Adré and Adikong (Ouaddaï).

Between 11 and 17 November, 1,881 individuals (692 families) arrived. On 17 November, 347 individuals (138 families) were recorded at entry points. Among these, 49% (169 individuals from 72 families) entered Chad through Oure Cassoni. Of these, 16.6% are persons with specific needs, including:

- Unaccompanied/separated minors: 50%
- Older adults: 29%
- Persons with disabilities: 14%
- Gunshot injuries: 3.5%
- Serious medical conditions: 3.5%

Families originate mainly from Birdic (41%), El Fasher (32%), Ambaru (18%), Kornoi (4%), and smaller numbers from Abgamra, Nyala, Abdilek, Amfrance, and Dor. Notably, 43% of families possess documentation from Sudan, highlighting protection and documentation needs.

Trends and Observations: Ennedi East, which hosts more than 60% of new arrivals, recorded a notable decrease in arrivals during weekends. Assessments indicate that refugees often communicate with family members remaining in Sudan, prompting them to travel on weekdays. After leaving El Fasher, many stop in Tawila, then continue through Um Baru and Abgamra before reaching the border.

Preparedness: Site development, extensions, and infrastructure construction are ongoing across camps, integrated zones, and relocation sites, including in Wadi Fira, where UNHCR and partners have relocated 20,849 refugees from Birak and Koulbous to Marassabre the past three months. At Touloum, the relocation of refugees from Tiné at the Sudan border—initially interrupted—resumed on 7 November and continues, with over 2,500 refugees already relocated to ease congestion at the transit center and prepare for new arrivals.

In Adré-Farchana (Ouaddaï), relocation from spontaneous sites at the border is ongoing. Over the past five days, 264 families (1,013 individuals) have been relocated from Adré to Kouchaguine-Moura, while 1,750 individuals remain on the waiting list. The growing demand for relocation is creating tensions among candidates. Reception sites face critical shortages of shelters and latrines, increasing vulnerability and requiring urgent action to ensure dignified conditions and reduce exposure to heat, wind, and cold.
