NEEDS

In 2012, the main source of income for many Syrian families was personal savings brought from Syria. However, in the last quarter of 2012 and the beginning of 2013, those savings have significantly depleted. UNHCR and partners have focused on (1) increasing self-employability of Syrian refugees in Egypt; (2) increasing the purchasing capacity of vulnerable Syrian refugees through provision of assistance by UNHCR and partners; and (3) establishing mechanism to protect Syrian refugees from work related risks such as exploitation present in the informal economy.

The influx of refugees has also increased demand on the local rental market. Refugees are scattered within communities; some of them are able to afford to rent apartments, others have been hosted by their relatives or friends. As the number of residents within communities has increased significantly and rapidly, the demand on basic urban services (BUS) has also increased. In collaboration with other UN Agencies and NGOs, UNHCR has been working on securing the basic needs of Syrian refugees with housing assistance and access to basic domestic items. Housing remains a pressing challenge for refugee communities.
