

Daily Report

Planning and Preparation:

The Council of the EU adopted regulations setting up an emergency support mechanism to support Greece and other member states overwhelmed by the arrival of large numbers of refugees. This translates a previous commitment by the European Council into practice. It enables the EU to provide a timely and effective response to the strenuous situation developing rapidly on the ground. Budgetary amendments would be required as the next step of this process.

Arrivals and Departures:

More than 8,000 people are present on Greek islands. Reception and temporary accommodation facilities are filled beyond capacity, particularly on Lesbos and Chios, despite the number of arrivals having decreased on Tuesday, 15 March, due to adverse weather.

Critical Developments

UNHCR Special Envoy Angelina Jolie will visit Lesbos today.

Brussels is already struggling to secure unanimous support at an EU summit this week for the agreement of proposals made on 7 March, which is backed by German Chancellor Angela Merkel but has met objections from at least six member countries, with stiff opposition from Cyprus and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Regarding the detailing of proposals made on 7 March at the EU summit with Turkey, to be agreed upon on Thursday 17 March, a significant detail vehiculated in Brussels is that the European Commission would advise Greece to drastically speed up processing of asylum requests to a week, rather than months, in order to avoid scuppering a potential deal with Turkey to slow down the inflow of refugees. Greece may be recommended to set up one-stop shops that would accept or reject asylum requests and go through the requisite legal appeals process, from the first instance to the final court appeal in a swift manner.

Response

The Government's Coordination Centre for the Management of the Refugee Crisis continued to move people from Piraeus to the new sites of Ritsona and Malakasa. A total of 8 buses (approx. 400 people) were organized on Monday.

As reception capacity is overstretched on the Greek Islands,

Condition of People:

EU Commissioner for Migration Dimitris Avramopoulos, accompanied by European Commission spokesman Margaritis Schinas, visited Eidomeni.

The statement made highlighted that relocation should immediately take the dimension of a humanitarian evacuation: "we have already increased the pledges from Member States and now it is urgently time to deliver. In parallel, the European Asylum Support Office is supporting the enormous efforts made by the Greek authorities to directly accept and act on these pledges. We need to reach 6000 relocations per month. Until then, I fully support the Greek Government's efforts to inform and persuade these people to be transferred to reception centers, with decent living and sanitary conditions, until their legal transfer is organised. The urgent needs of these people must be met immediately, whether they are in reception centers or here in Eidomeni."

UNHCR is working with authorities and partners to address urgent needs. On Lesbos, UNHCR, authorities and partners are continuously reassessing accommodation capacities and contingencies. An emergency planning meeting was convened by the Lesbos representative of the Alternate Ministry for Migration Policy, attended by Army, Police, UNHCR, IRC, and MSF. On Samos, UNHCR's partner Samaritan Purse moved 5 Refugee Housing Units from Malagari Port to Vathy Hotspot and 3 are already in use for accommodation. Around 200 tents provided by MSF and volunteers are accommodating people at Vathy Hotspot.

All food distributions at Vathy Hotspot and Malagari Port are carried out by volunteers. On Thursday, in both sites, Apostoli/ IOCC will deliver 3 meals a day via catering services.

Weather Headlines

With only very light rain around Eidomeni on Thursday and with drier days and some sunshine on Friday and Saturday surface water will start to dry up.

Northerly winds in the Aegean have moderated but waves are still around 0.5m around Lesbos and close to 1m near Kos and Rhodes.

Wave Height vs Arrivals to Lesbos

The graph highlights the historical correlation (from 1st January 2016 until present) between the average wave heights around Lesbos and number of registered arrivals to the island. The data shows a clear negative correlation: as the sea states become rougher, with increasing wave heights, the number of people travelling to Lesbos decreases. As sea states and wave heights reduce, the number of people travelling to Lesbos increases.

Applying this same negative correlation to forecast wave data allows us to make a forecast prediction on the number of people moving from Turkey to the Greek islands, giving a trend on whether these numbers will increase or decrease.

- The rainfall in the border area between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia by the middle of March has been over three times the average for the whole of March. Around Eidomeni there will be some very light rain showers but with some sunshine breaking through and good dry spells the surface water should dry up over the next few days.
- Past events have shown a reduction in arrivals to the Greek Islands when waves are large. Although the winds have eased in the Aegean, waves are still moderate around the north Islands like Lesvos and large around the southern Islands like Kos. Waves are expected to decrease on Friday.

- It will feel cooler across SE Europe and the change in temperatures will be very noticeable after the wet and cloudy conditions, those sleeping outdoors may feel very chilled and suffer cold-related illnesses. Temperatures are expected to rise by a few degrees by the weekend.
