Foreword

What a year it has been. In 2021, Mexico became the third top country worldwide in the number of new asylum applications. Nationals from various countries, mainly Haiti, North Central America, Venezuela, Cuba, among others, filed asylum claims throughout the year. The persistent effects of COVID-19 on health and movements, continued instability across several countries in the region, the rise of secondary and mixed movements arriving at Mexico's southern border and the growing numbers of internally displaced people are only a few of the trends which have characterized this past year.

As the year ends, I am left with images of my numerous visits to UNHCR's field locations, from Tapachula in the south and where Mexico begins, to the northernmost desert stretches near Tijuana, passing through the historical old towns of Mexico's Bajío region, among others. In these images I see the expressions of people forced to flee – expressions of relief for finally having found safety and shelter, of relief for their families reunited, of hope for better days to come. I also met with many people who shared their sadness for having lost their homes, melancholy for loved ones left behind, and concern for what their future holds. For thousands of asylum seekers, refugees, and internally displaced people in Mexico, the reality is that the next few weeks and months of their lives are full of a feeling of uncertainty, mixed with hope for a better future. Will I be able to stay in Mexico? Will my spouse be able to work? Will my children go back to school? – are just some of the questions they asked me. I saw women, men, children, and teenagers whose rights and dignity have been violated multiple times. The COVID-19 pandemic has exacerbated their vulnerabilities. Yet in all my visits, their resolve and resilience are clear: they are in search of a better, safer future. Here is where I am convinced that UNHCR can contribute- in providing the tools to rebuild lives.

Looking back also at the achievements of UNHCR's teams across the country, I can say with confidence that we provided tens of thousands of people of concern with humanitarian support and legal assistance. For thousands, we found solutions to their plight, helping them to relocate and settle down with a new home and employment, becoming an active part of their new communities. Together with our many partners, we offered protection, counselling, assistance, material support, and at times, comfort. In a remarkably turbulent and challenging year, I am proud of the progress we have achieved, made possible only thanks to the sustained generous support of donors and through UNHCR's close relationship and coordination with federal, state and municipal authorities, civil society organisations and the church, UN agencies and international organisations - and, critically - with refugees and internally displaced people themselves.

As we prepare for another challenging year ahead, we thank you for your continued support to UNHCR and the people we strive to support and protect.

2021 operational context and UNHCR response

2021 saw a record number of asylum applications in Mexico. More than 131,000 new asylum applications were registered, compared to 41,000 in 2020, representing an increase of 220%. In addition to the above, restrictions imposed by the COVID-19 pandemic continued in 2021, with intermittent limitations of mobility of people in several states, closure of schools during the first semester of the year, and the suspension of non-essential administrative procedures affecting the ability for refugees to integrate in the country.

In 2021, Mexico experienced three different pressures simultaneously in terms of population movements: in the south, in the North and internal displacement.

From March onwards, the sudden and sharp increase in arrivals of high numbers of people considered under “mixed and secondary movements”, primarily of Haitian nationals, and the absence of legal alternatives to regularize the stay of those not in need of international protection, overwhelmed the capacity of the Mexican Commission for Refugee Assistance (COMAR). Most of the Haitians who entered Mexico had lived in other countries in the Americas, in particular in Chile and Brazil, for a number of years. They travelled to Mexico together with their children, some of whom had acquired Chilean or Brazilian nationality at birth. With most asylum-seekers and migrants entering Mexico through the southern border, the state of Chiapas, and to a lesser extent the neighbouring state of Tabasco, was faced with sizeable groups of population with very acute humanitarian and protection needs. Owing to the number of vulnerable asylum-seekers who requested support through UNHCR, the assistance programme increased at a scale which surpassed UN Refugee Agency's capacity to register and assess these cases in a timely manner. Growing frustration among asylum seekers and the saturation of public services presented challenges for the reception capacity in host communities.

In the north, border restrictions and expulsions to Mexico and to countries of origin from the United States under the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention public health order (referred to as Title 42) persisted throughout 2021. Direct expulsion flights from southern United States to the states of Chiapas and Tabasco and subsequent direct transportation from southern Mexico to Honduras and Guatemala were identified between August and November 2021, affecting some tens of thousands of individuals. Following a decision by President Joe Biden, from February to August 2021 the winding down of the Migrant Protection Protocols (MPP) - or “Remain in Mexico” programme - supported over 13,000 people to be readmitted to the United States as they await their court hearings. The policy decision by the Biden Administration was welcome, enabling thousands of asylum seekers to stay in the country where they sought asylum pending the outcome of the process, in line with international refugee law standards. Subsequently, in December 2021, the implementation of the MPP resumed following a U.S. Federal District Court order. Throughout the year, encounters at the U.S. – Mexican border, including Mexicans seeking asylum in the United States, also increased.

Finally, almost 29,000 people in 10 states were displaced in massive events caused by violence in 2021, according to the Mexican NGO Commission for the Defence and Promotion of Human Rights (CMDPDH)- the highest number reported since 2016. Despite the Mexican Government's recognition of the occurrence of internal displacement, the development of legal instruments underway and the consequent operational response, these have proven to be insufficient, and internally displaced people continued to face challenges in accessing protection, assistance, and solutions.

The above challenges notwithstanding, 2021 was also marked by significant achievements in relation to solutions for refugees and asylum seekers in Mexico. The relocation and job placement programme (more commonly known by its Spanish acronym "PIL", for Programa de Integración Local) supported the highest number of refugees so far in one year, with over 7,700 people relocated to the industrial corridors in the centre and north of Mexico. In addition, over 35,500 asylum-seekers and refugees benefitted from in situ local integration support in the states where they arrive and register. This success is all the more significant considering the numerous constraints faced by teams implementing the Programme, such as the recurring postponement of relocations owing to COVID-19 limitations on movements, and the temporary restrictions on the relocation of refugees without residency permits.

To advance our protection and solutions agenda, high-level events were organized in the context of the Comprehensive Regional Framework on Protection and Solutions (commonly known by its Spanish acronym MIRPS, for Marco Integral Regional para la Protección y Soluciones). COMAR led the organization of roundtables on strengthening asylum systems, registration and documentation; labour inclusion and collaboration with private sector; and education and health, amongst others. Other inter-agency collaboration platforms were established or strengthened in 2021, as for example within the UN's Inter-agency Group on Migration and Asylum (GIMA), co-led by UNHCR and IOM.

While UNHCR's operational context in 2021 continued to be affected by the COVID-19 pandemic, business continuity was nevertheless ensured by maintaining essential staff, activities and services in the field and throughout its offices. In February 2021, a Level 1 emergency was declared, boosting our workforce across key locations and enhancing our operational capacity to support the wind-down of the MPP programme.

UNHCR's office structure was also revised, resulting in the creation of two new Sub-Offices to cover the north and south of the country, in Monterrey (Nuevo León) and Tuxtla Gutiérrez (Chiapas), respectively. Three field units were also opened in the cities

With 21 offices actively working throughout the country by the end of the year, UNHCR- had expanded to meet the needs of the fast-growing number of refugees and asylum seekers in Mexico and support the government’s capacity to assist them.

UNHCR’s evidence-based approach has been substantially strengthened throughout 2021 to better inform its protection and solutions programmes and activities. Beyond multiple internal analyses, we supported the publication of two important studies that shed light on the magnitude of the phenomenon of forced displacement in the region : “Forced displacement to Mexico from Central America, 2014-2019” and the study of the Colegio de la Frontera Norte: “Profiles, dynamics and perspectives regarding the situation of refugees in Mexico”

The end of MPP allowed thousands to restart their lives

The wait was over for 36 year-old Honduran Clely* and her 13-year-old son Efrén. They had applied for asylum in the United States in September 2019 but for nearly two years, were made to remain in Mexico while their case was making its way through U.S. courts. After the long wait, mother and son were part of a group of people who re-entered the United States through Ciudad Juarez to continue their asylum process there.

“They were moments of anguish, tears, helplessness, desperation, because it has been very difficult to stay in Juarez. I have had a hard time. Today I can’t believe we are here,” said Clely, at the Leona Vicario Migrant Integration Centre, a Mexican Government shelter in Ciudad Juarez where people gather before the longed-for crossing.

From February to August 2021, when the U.S. Government suspended the MPP wind-down process, more than 13,000 people were re-admitted to the United States. Through a collaborative engagement with both governments, UNHCR worked in close coordination with IOM, UNICEF and the International Committee for the Red Cross (ICRC) to assist eligible people to have their cases processed. UNHCR and its partners provided information and legal counselling and conducted a screening to identify those returned under MPP that should be fast-tracked due to risks or vulnerabilities.

The Honduran women Sonia, Silvia and Karla, all of them mothers, met in Matamoros, where they lived until the MPP was lifted. In Honduras, ten members of Sonia’s family had been killed. Returning was never an option. In the Matamoros camp, despite challenges, they formed a community: they cooked together, took care of each other’s children, gave each other support when they had to call their families and tell them they were well, even though they were not. “For many of us, this has been a life lesson. It is something that no one will ever forget, not even the children, I don’t think they can forget this.,” Sonia said.

It was an arduous and long wait for people forced to stay in Mexico during the first phase of MPP, especially those who spent more than a year and a half in an informal camp of tents and latrines set up in Matamoros in early 2019. The Matamoros camp was emptied and closed in February 2021.

Working with others

Throughout 2021, UNHCR Mexico partnered with a growing number of public institutions at the federal, state, and municipal levels. Our office also strengthened relationships with other UN Agencies and international organisations, academia, private sector, civil society and faith-based organizations.

UNHCR cooperates closely with authorities and public institutions, including the Mexican Commission for Refugee Assistance, the National Migration Institute, the Ministry of Interior, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the National System for Integral Family Development, the Public Defender's Office, Child Protection Authorities, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Labour, the Ministry of Social Welfare, the Population Registry, the National Population Council, the Migration Policy Unit, the Supreme Court, the Congress and the Senate, and the Taxpayers Registry. At field level where UNHCR's presence is strong, we have established effective communication and collaboration mechanisms with local government at state and municipality level. The inter-ministerial roundtable on inclusion and integration of refugees chaired by undersecretary Alejandro Encinas to implement MIRPS continued to be an important platform for coordination between government entities, UN agencies, and development actors.

As part of the second year of implementation of Mexico's United Nations Sustainable Development Cooperation Framework (UNSCDF), UNHCR actively engaged within the strategic, technical, and thematic groups established at the UN level to enhance the visibility and - where possible - the inclusion of asylum seekers and refugees within the UN's response and programmes. UNHCR, together with IOM, established the structure and objectives of the interagency Group on Migration and Asylum (GIMA), which became the main forum for UNHCR and IOM to share information, trends and developments in real time as regards forced displacement in the country. The GIMA is also a platform for the UN Country Team to discuss and design protection and solutions programmes in the context of Mexico's complex mixed movements. In 2021, a new Working Group on Internal Displacement was established under the GIMA.

The Protection Working Group and seven technical working groups focusing on different topics convened on a regular basis throughout 2021 under UNHCR's leadership or co-leadership. Among them are groups focused on Gender-Based Violence, Child Protection and Shelter. These fora enabled regular sharing of information and a more coordinated response among UN agencies and NGOs.

By the end of 2021, UNHCR Mexico had entered into 38 partnership agreements with different organisations across Mexico, including seven international and 31 local organisations. We also signed 13 memoranda of understanding with authorities of federal and local governments, academic institutions and private sector organisations. These partnerships have contributed to the enhanced implementation of protection and integration activities and strengthened our capacity to better respond to the needs of asylum seekers and refugees.

Funding

UNHCR’s budget increased considerably in 2021 compared to previous years, amounting to a total of US$70,814,148. With an implementation rate of 100 per cent, Mexico positioned itself within the top three UNHCR operations with the highest implementation rates in the Latin America Region.

Our operation was grateful to benefit from several contributions from governments and private donors. Funds received from the United States accounted for 77 per cent of our overall Mexico’s earmarked contributions. It supported the development of our programmes and the expansion of our presence to 21 locations across the country, while also bringing funding for the wind-down of the MPP programme and for the facilitation of the entry to the United States of vulnerable asylum seekers exempted from the application of Title 42.

Important multiannual contributions received from the European Union, Germany, Canada and Qatar

continued supporting UNHCR’s coordination and operational efforts to address critical protection issues and provide solutions for forcibly displaced populations in Mexico, and to pursue our support and strengthening of Mexico’s asylum system.

In addition, contributions from private donors increased considerably in 2021, accounting for 14 per cent of our total budget. This was possible thanks to an important multiannual funding received from the USA for UNHCR and Howard Buffet Foundation for UNHCR’s Local Integration Programme, and as a result of enhanced and dedicated fundraising efforts through the Private Partnership and Philanthropy (PPH) sector. 87 per cent of PPH fundraising came from individual donors and 13 per cent from foundations and corporations based in Mexico. We also succeeded to renew our partnership with Fondo Unido, which became the largest Mexican contributor to our operation.

High level visits during 2021 were strategic to strengthen Mexico's operation in a moment when flows of displaced people raised significantly.

Gillian Triggs

After the suspension of field visits in 2020 owing to the COVID-19 pandemic, in coordination with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, UNHCR leaders visited Mexico in 2021 to witness the surge of emerging flows of mixed movements across the region and towards Mexico and lend support to our operations.

In May, as a part of her trip to the wider region, UN Deputy High Commissioner for Refugees Kelly T. Clements spent six days in Mexico, visiting Tapachula, on the border with Guatemala, and Ciudad Juárez in the north. On her brief stop in Mexico City, the Deputy High Commissioner met with senior government officials, civil society partners, business leaders, and donors. She also visited shelters, was able to spend time with refugee families in their homes, learned about the Local Integration Programme in Guanajuato, interacted with employers from the private sector who have recruited refugees, and met refugee students at the University of Guanajuato.

In the last week of August, Assistant High Commissioner for Protection Gillian Triggs visited Mexico City, Ciudad Juárez, and Tapachula, where she witnessed first-hand the protection challenges faced by asylum-seekers, many of whom undertake long journeys before arriving to Mexico. The Assistant High Commissioner acknowledged efforts made by the Mexican authorities and civil society in the face of the unprecedented rise in mixed population flows. Her visit allowed for greater visibility to the broader displacement situation in the Central America region and the complex protection challenges that characterise it.

Filippo Grandi

During his last visit to Mexico United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Filippo Grandi, promoted the importance of developing legal alternatives for those who deserve consideration as vulnerable groups of people on the move and who may not return to their country of origin.

Two years after his last visit to Mexico, UNHCR Mexico hosted High Commissioner for Refugees Filippo Grandi in November. While in Tijuana, he was accompanied by U.S. Ambassador Ken Salazar, on a visit to the Scalabrini's Training Centre for Migrants (CESFOM), established with the support of the U.S. Government. High Commissioner Grandi and EU Ambassador Gautier Mignot jointly inaugurated the newly-refurbished COMAR facilities, a project co-funded by the European Union. Among his key messages, High Commissioner Grandi highlighted the importance of safeguarding the asylum system in Mexico to guarantee its access to those who are in need of international protection. Connected to this, he emphasised the importance of developing legal alternatives for those who deserve consideration as vulnerable groups of people on the move and who may not return to their country of origin. He also conveyed the importance of stepping-up the prevention and response to internal displacement in the country. The UN Resident Coordinator in Mexico, Peter Grohmann, accompanied High Commissioner Grandi on part of his visit.

Ensuring access to protection and protection responses

A Salvadoran refugee taxi driver talks to a UNHCR staff member outside his workplace in Saltillo, Coahuila. Business is brisk in the city where factories and assembly plants make everything from trucks, cars and auto parts to home appliances and furniture.

In response to the growing number of asylum-seekers arriving in southern Mexico and the changing dynamics along the northern border, UNHCR scaled-up its protection response activities in 2021; more than ever, we focused on enhancing COMAR's capacity in registering and processing of asylum claims, offering legal counselling and psychosocial care to asylum seekers and refugees. Furthermore, as outlined in the next chapter, we focused on ensuring adequate reception conditions for new arrivals, stepping up humanitarian assistance and supporting the establishment of community protection networks along the main reception areas. Coupled with a substantial increase in UNHCR staff and the deployment of roving teams, these efforts were established in cooperation with our partners along Mexico's southern and northern borders.

Access to asylum

The unprecedented arrival of mixed and secondary movements into the country from July onwards and the absence of alternative migratory pathways generated overwhelming pressure on the asylum system. To manage the arrivals and guarantee access to asylum, COMAR organized a large-scale appointments issuance exercise at the Estadio Olímpico in Tapachula, attending approximately 55,000 people. In November 2021, the National Institute for Migration (INM) initiated a relocation exercise aimed at redistributing the workload for regularisation throughout INM offices across the country. INM transported over 37,000 people to 17 cities in the centre and north of the country and provided a pre-registration document to other 12,000 who travelled by their own means.

Since its opening in March 2021, UNHCR's Refugee Service Centre (CAR by acronym in Spanish) in Tapachula has registered over 48,500 people. The registration process included evaluations, in-person and remote verifications for assistance, and protection interviews. The new space for the CAR, located next to COMAR's registration centre, allowed for a more organic attention circuit and more efficient referral pathway between COMAR and UNHCR.

I lost everything

Ingrid has suffered enough. In 2019, criminal gangs violently emptied her house in Honduras after she refused to pay the monthly fee of 3,000 lempiras (about US$125) so her eldest son won't be recruited.

In November 2020, hurricanes Eta and Iota hit her hometown, destroying everything she had. Ingrid and her four children were left with nothing. She fled Honduras at the beginning of 2021 and claimed asylum in Mexico.

“The gangs always asked for rent (extortion). They threatened me: ‘if you don't pay the rent, you could pay with the life of one of your children or with something you have in your house’”, she explained.

Like many of her neighbours, Ingrid decided to leave. Before she went to Mexico, she left her children with a friend. After a long journey between buses and car rides, she arrived at Tecún Umán on the Guatemala-Mexico border. She then crossed the Suchiate River and headed for Tapachula.

Along the way, she was informed of the existence of the COMAR, where she could apply for asylum.

Meanwhile, the maras found out that the family left the town and they called Ingrid's son to ask for more money. With these new threats, she asked her friend to help her children make their way to Mexico. Fortunately, the four arrived a month later and the family is now waiting for the response to their asylum claim.

Ingrid's future looks brighter now. Her dream is to find a job, feel safe and support her parents back home in Honduras.

Working with the Mexican Commission for Refugee Assistance (COMAR)

Despite challenges related to the pandemic and the unprecedented number of new arrivals in Mexico, COMAR's processing capacity in 2021 increased by 116 per cent compared to 2020. This was possible thanks to the technical and financial support provided by UNHCR in the past years, such as additional staff, material resources, and technical assistance, through the Quality Asylum Initiative (QAI) programme.

To enhance COMAR's presence across the country, strengthen its technical capacities and the efficiency of asylum processes, in 2021 UNHCR supported:

The contracting of 215 additional staff for COMAR and the purchase of computer equipment and licenses for new personnel;

The refurbishment and furnishing of COMAR offices in Guadalajara, Mexico City, Saltillo, Tapachula Registration Centre (ISMAN), Tenosique and Tijuana;

The rental of mobile offices for COMAR Tapachula, providing additional interviews areas to increase efficiency of asylum processing;

Operating expenses such as telecommunications (60 cell phones and fixed telephone and internet lines) and their maintenance in several COMAR offices;

The purchase of printing equipment and toners for COMAR in Monterrey, Palenque, Tapachula and Tijuana;

The costs of approximately 435 missions for COMAR staff to follow up on asylum cases in locations that do not benefit from a fixed COMAR presence; and interpretation services for interviews in languages such as German, Pulaar, Farsi, Swahili, Russian, Hindi, Creole and Urdu.

Moreover, at national level, with the support of the QAI programme, COMAR and UNHCR have been developing several digital transformation projects which are expected to further simplify procedures, generate significant efficiency benefits and increase overall fairness and accountability of asylum procedure. The full implementation of the digital transformation is scheduled for 2022, and foresees close collaboration with governmental institutions such as COMAR, SRE, RENAPO and INM.

Access to information

In 2021, UNHCR responded to over a quarter of a million inquiries received through the UNHCR-Mexico's helpdesk, providing information and orientation to refugees and asylum seekers from across the region. Helpdesk users were mostly adults from Cuba, Honduras, El Salvador, Haiti, and Venezuela. The web platform CONECTA - established to support the wind down of MPP - received over 130,000 visits, while UNHCR help desk had more than 373,000 visitors. Moreover, the UNHCR portal Confía en el Jaguar became the most followed Facebook page for people on the move who are in need of international protection, with a monthly average of 571,000 users.

Theatre - a way to inform on asylum procedures

UNHCR Mexico and its partner La Casa del Teatro staged two theatre plays aimed at providing information on the asylum system and explaining rights and obligations of refugees in Mexico.

“Tu casa, tu corazón” was premiered by the CEDRAM theatre group with the financial support of the European Union. The play tells the story of two brothers and their grandmother who had to leave their country because of violence and insecurity. Upon their arrival in Mexico, they must make a difficult decision: whether to pursue the American dream and move further north or seek protection in Mexico. Eventually, the family requests asylum in Mexico and remains united.

The second play, “Los sueños de Manuel”, presented by the Ráfaga theatre group, tells the story of Manuel’s journey through Mexico after he was forced to leave his country of origin, his home and his family. On his way, he encounters difficulties but also people who provide aid and information, including on how to apply for asylum.

Between September and November, the two performances were staged in shelters, schools, universities, and community centres across 17 cities through a total of 49 presentations, reaching almost 4,000 spectators.

Several strategic collaborations in 2021 were officialized by UNHCR with relevant stakeholders to promote the human rights of refugees.

Strengthened relationships with academia

In 2021 a historic agreement was signed with the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM), covering multiple angles of collaboration with UNHCR. These included the provision of Spanish courses for refugees, recognition of their diplomas, and the strengthening of the legal clinic of the UNAM. A special degree (Diplomado) on migration and asylum was also developed: with the curriculum for the degree now complete, the first generation of students will begin in the first semester of 2022.

UNHCR's pursued new collaboration with academia through the establishment of three new legal clinics at the Autonomous University of Aguascalientes, the University of Guadalajara, and the Tecnológico de Monterrey (campus Guadalajara). UNHCR has also been working with the Autonomous University of Ciudad Juarez, the Autonomous University of Saltillo, and the Autonomous University of San Luis Potosí, where similar projects are already being implemented.

Legal aid

Throughout 2021, UNHCR and its legal partners assisted nearly 60,000 asylum seekers and refugees, of whom some 10,000 received legal representation from UNHCR's network of 76 lawyers and 32 paralegals. Over 3,000 individuals benefited from legal assistance in the course of their refugee status determination process in Mexico.

UNHCR also actively supported the consolidation of a network of legal advisors through the organization of two national workshops and 26 training sessions for lawyers and paralegals. The objective of these events was to develop a strategy and strengthen a common approach in the provision of information and assistance to asylum seekers and refugees. Moreover, a memorandum of understanding was signed with a network of private lawyers for pro bono assistance to asylum seekers and refugees.

During 2021, under the Alternative to Detention Program (ATD), in coordination with INM and COMAR, UNHCR supported the release of 631 asylum seekers from detention. An additional 782 asylum-seekers were assisted to leave detention within the framework of local agreements with Detention Centres.

Reception conditions and access to services with attention to specific needs

One of the key areas of humanitarian assistance most affected by the exponential growth of mixed and secondary movements to Mexico in 2021 was that of shelter. Shelters are critical points for refugees and asylum seekers, providing safety and accommodation, information on the right to asylum and targeted assistance. With the significant increase of new arrivals in 2021, shelters were often overcrowded. To address this, UNHCR provided additional material support and capacity-building of shelters. We also supported the consolidation of referral pathways for the prevention and response to gender-based violence and attention to people with specific needs, such as Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Intersex and Queer (LGBTIQ+) people, children, women at risk, older adults, and people with disabilities.

Shelters

In 2021 UNHCR stepped up its efforts to monitor the needs and enhance reception conditions in the shelters located along main migratory routes in Mexico.

UNHCR supported 148 shelters, mainly run by civil society organizations, in 44 cities, distributing:

406,037 cleaning materials and personal protective equipment (PPE) items so that they could continue to operate while observing sanitary protocols,

730 food packages,

56,602 hygiene items (including personal hygiene kits, diapers, and first aid items),

200 home appliances,

50 kitchen appliances,

1,215 furniture items for offices, and 37 computers and printing kits.

By the end of the year, UNHCR had signed 20 formal partnership agreements, covering 32 shelters nationwide, through which we facilitated the implementation of protection activities and supported the recruitment of additional specialised staff such as lawyers, paralegals, psychologists, social workers, psychiatrists, nurses, doctors and registration officials. 16 child-friendly spaces were created in shelters with the support of our partner Save the Children, providing psychosocial and educational activities for children on the move. Eight shelters received additional support from 22 volunteers trained within a new UNHCR volunteer programme.

In parallel, UNHCR made significant investments in the infrastructure of 15 shelters to increase their accommodation capacities and improve conditions. Four other projects were initiated and are expected to be completed by 2022, including the construction of two new shelters in San Cristobal de las Casas, Chiapas, and in Monterrey, Nuevo Leon. Additionally, UNHCR in cooperation with the Mexican Coalition for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (COAMEX) and the NGO Libre Acceso carried out an accessibility assessment in four shelters and recommended three infrastructure interventions to be launched in 2022 with a view to improve safety and inclusiveness for people with disabilities. UNHCR also promoted the use of clean energies: photovoltaic systems were installed in seven shelters.

Furthermore, UNHCR sought to guarantee critical protection standards by providing training to more than 300 employees of shelter, covering specific topics such as the prevention of and response to GBV, and protection from sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA), child protection, and the mainstreaming of the age, gender and diversity in the assistance provided in the shelters.

UNHCR continued to facilitate the Interagency Working Group on Shelters through which UNHCR, IOM, UNICEF and ICRC coordinated support and donations provided to shelters. In 2021, the group began to roll out a dedicated interagency coordination online platform.

Humanitarian Assistance Programme

In 2021 UNHCR provided humanitarian assistance through multi-purpose cash grants to over 47,000 asylum seekers (24,000 households), covering 64 per cent of asylum seekers registered with UNHCR last year. The humanitarian assistance was intended to provide the most vulnerable asylum seekers with a possibility to continue in the asylum procedure and meet part of their basic needs. Humanitarian assistance also reduces protection risks - mitigating their recourse to negative coping mechanisms.

Throughout 2021, changes were made to the programme to ensure its sustainability, efficiency and to prevent abuses. Firstly, UNHCR expanded the programme to Tijuana and Mexicali, increasing the number of UNHCR offices providing humanitarian assistance to nine (in addition to the seven offices who already used cash as assistance: Acayucan, Mexico City, Monterrey, Palenque, Saltillo, Tapachula and Tenosique). Secondly, necessary adjustments were made in the targeting process and eligibility criteria to respond to the needs of asylum seekers within a context of rapidly growing numbers and increased vulnerabilities. Thirdly, an additional filter was added to the targeting process to mitigate risks of misuse of assistance by analysing individual's intentions and previous secondary movements.

Accountability and impact of the UNHCR Humanitarian Assistance Programme

The UNHCR Humanitarian Assistance Programme in Mexico has had a structured evaluation scheme in place since 2020: spot-checking calls for a limited sample of 50 cases are conducted twice a year and combined with a Post Distribution Monitoring (PDM).

In 2021 the PDM was carried out in March and August. The results of the two PDM were similar and confirmed that over 70 per cent of beneficiaries of humanitarian assistance were able to cover all or most of their basic needs, with over 90 per cent who could access the required goods and services. Some 80 per cent found themselves "very satisfied" with the attention received from the Programme and confirmed they would opt for the same assistance modality which, in this instance, was MPG distributed through prepaid cards from SiVale.

UNHCR also carried out a market assessment that confirmed the availability of affordable housing for the beneficiaries of humanitarian assistance. Following the recommendations of the study, we designed short guidelines for each location where the Programme is implemented summarizing rental options, price ranges and recommended locations to help asylum seekers make informed decisions when looking for accommodation and where there is a risk of market manipulation.

In November, UNHCR successfully piloted ‘transition workshops’ in Palenque for those who had received their first month of humanitarian assistance, aimed at enhancing individual self-reliance and integration once the support provided would come to an end. The workshops focused on labour rights, available vocational trainings and the UNHCR local integration programme, financial education, use of prepaid cards and associated risks. The project will be rolled out across other locations in 2022.

Lastly, following the joint mapping of financial service providers, the interagency working group dedicated to cash assistance interventions co-led by UNHCR, launched a process to establish a common framework agreement for services, increasing efficiency, and levelling the playing field for two modalities: prepaid cards and bank accounts.

During 2021, haitians represented near 40% of new asylum claims.

Participatory Assessments

Between 18 September and 11 October, together with partners, UNHCR carried out participatory assessments in 21 cities where UNHCR had established presence. The following eight priority and four optional topics were addressed in the discussions: the impact of the pandemic on the asylum procedure and integration opportunities access to public services; access to specialized services and to information for people with specific needs; the role of shelters in protection and integration; feedback on UNHCR's labour insertion programme and community initiatives; and on their perception of discrimination and xenophobia. A specific questionnaire was also designed to engage with local host communities.

Results of Participative Assessments 2021

Community-based protection

Supporting empowered, participative, informed, and organised refugee communities in Mexico continued to be our priority in 2021. From the local level, UNHCR worked with refugees communities to improve their autonomy and develop their leadership skills to design and lead projects that in turn would foster their protection and integration. For instance, in partnership with NGO Via Educación UNHCR promoted community structures and leadership in Monterrey, while in Aguascalientes, we supported Venezuelan refugees who lead a psychosocial support group, reaching some 190 refugees and asylum seekers.

In 2021, UNHCR worked on enhancing our communication with asylum seekers and refugees to better respond to their needs, particularly those emerging during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Several initiatives were implemented with specific population groups: youth, women at risk and LGBTQI+ people, people with mental health needs, and groups with multiple vulnerabilities, such as women with disabilities. We also encouraged the identification of leaders within their own communities.

Importantly, UNHCR boosted accountability towards communities we work with through the Community-based Complaint Mechanism (CBCM). Through our services, the CBCM provided affected population groups with access to a safe and confidential means of voicing complaints or providing feedback on their experiences. Up until mid-December, 3,836 reports had been channelled through the mechanism, including requests for assistance.

‘I’m not going to hide what I am anymore’

When the criminal gang targeted Ana and Paula’s* teenage daughter and son, the family ran for their lives. Paula lived with her partner, Ana, when the gang turned its attention to Ana’s son, Oscar, almost 13. Ana would never give her son to the gangs, but she knew what that refusal would mean for her and Paula. “They would kill us both”.

Paula and Ana were trapped in deadly violence in their home country and faced difficulties both at home and after they fled due to their sexual orientation or gender identity. Their journey to safety was dangerous. In Guatemala, their family was robbed. Without money to pay for the bus fare, they walked for 3 days, finally reaching southern Mexico.

Mexico recognizes persecution based on gender as a stand-alone reason to grant asylum. COMAR often recognizes those who have fled because of their sexual orientation or gender identity and they have a high chance of receiving protection.

Ana and Paula lodged a claim for asylum in Mexico. UNHCR has supported them, explaining their rights to them under international law and helping to determine what they would need should they stay in Mexico. Ana and Paula hope to get married in Mexico City. Now they are hopeful for the future.

Child Protection

The legal reforms aligning the Law on Refugees, Complementary Protection and Political Asylum and Migration Law with the General Law on the Rights of Children, which prohibited child immigration detention and placed the best interest of the child at the centre of every decision involving children on the move, came into force in January 2021. The full implementation of the reforms, however, proved challenging owing to limited resources.

To this end, UNHCR, and IOM implemented joint actions to support the government in the implementation of these reforms. UNHCR funded positions to create teams composed of lawyers, psychologists, and social workers within Child Protection Authorities (CPA) in Acayucan, Matamoros, Palenque, Saltillo, Tapachula, Tenosique, and Villahermosa. In the fourth quarter of 2021, they assessed cases of over 500 children, referring approximately half of them to asylum procedures and/or temporary immigration status to prevent refoulement. Over 700 representatives of CPA and other government institutions, civil society organizations, UNHCR field offices, and partners were trained on child protection, focusing on the identification of children in need of international protection, access to asylum, best interest determination, alternative care arrangements, family reunification, and case management. UNHCR also supported government efforts to implement the Comprehensive Protection Protocol for Children on the Move. Finally, together with UNICEF we identified 16 public and private shelters across 10 municipalities who had expressed interest in receiving technical support to shift towards a community-based attention model. We further offered financial support to equip and rehabilitate these spaces.

In 2021, UNHCR partnered with Fundación Casa Alianza Mexico, SOS Children’s Villages and Fundación JUCONI to implement a foster care programme and provide residential care for 85 asylum seeking and refugee children in cases where family reunification was not possible.

Furthermore, together with Save the Children we promoted school enrolment, conducted case management for children at risk, and implemented emergency education, composed of recreational, psychosocial and sports activities for over 36,000 children in the states of Baja California, Chiapas, Chihuahua, Tabasco, Tamaulipas, and Veracruz.

In coordination with UNICEF, UNHCR led the interagency working group on Child Protection, engaging other actors on issues related to the protection of children in situation of forced displacement, and facilitating joint efforts to find concrete solutions.

Preventing and responding Gender Based Violence (GBV)

UNHCR undertook several activities to advance the prevention, mitigation, and response to GBV in the course of 2021. Firstly, under prevention measures, UNHCR led the interagency sub-working group on GBV, updated the referral pathways for GBV services, and trained on remote service provision and psychological first aid - issues that became particularly relevant as the pandemic continued. The GBV sub-group also held a training with a specialized local NGO on positive masculinities.

In terms of response, the Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) on GBV Response were updated, in line with UNHCR's new Policy on GBV Prevention, Mitigation, and Response (2020). 849 survivors of gender-based violence were assisted in cooperation with our specialized partners – HIAS, Alternativas Pacificas (ALPAZ) and Médicos del Mundo. Moreover, given the additional risk of violence faced by LGBTIQ+ people, SOPs on Attention for LGBTIQ+ refugee and asylum seeking populations were created and implemented across our offices.

Throughout 2021, UNHCR provided training on GBV prevention and response and on the prevention of SEA to 1,770 government officials, our own staff and partner organisations. UNHCR produced creative communication materials and placed them in spaces such as bathrooms in shelters so that asylum seekers and refugees, GBV survivors or victims of SEA could see them without risk.

Working with people with specific needs

Out of almost 75,000 asylum seekers and refugees that UNHCR registered for assistance in 2021, two thirds were identified as having at least one specific need, and one third had two; among them the fact that there are children, women and older women at risk, people with serious medical conditions, LGBTIQ+, children, survivors of GBV and people with disabilities.

UNHCR registration data shows that asylum seekers with the most severe vulnerabilities were of Honduran nationality. 56 per cent of the children at risk (mostly those who did not go to school), and 79 per cent of all unaccompanied children came from Honduras. Moreover, of some 4,000 single-parent families, 85.5 per cent were headed by a woman, and the vast majority came from Honduras. In the category of people with legal and physical protection needs, 41 per cent were homeless or beneficiaries of humanitarian assistance and 32 per cent did not have any form of documentation. Within these two groups, asylum seekers of Haitian nationality accounted for 34 per cent and 39 per cent, respectively.

UNHCR provided support to those most vulnerable groups of asylum-seekers, channelling 54 per cent of them to protection services, granting cash-based assistance to 14 per cent, and referring 8 per cent to education services and 5 per cent to medical care facilities. Almost 5,500 asylum seekers and refugees benefited from mental health and psychosocial interventions implemented by our 23 partners across the country. Finally, 287 UNHCR and partner staff were trained on protection responses for people with specific needs.

Sustainable solutions for refugees

Jorge González, salvadoran refugee, talks to UNHCR staff at te Greenpaper offices in Monterrey, Nuevo León where he works as an operator.

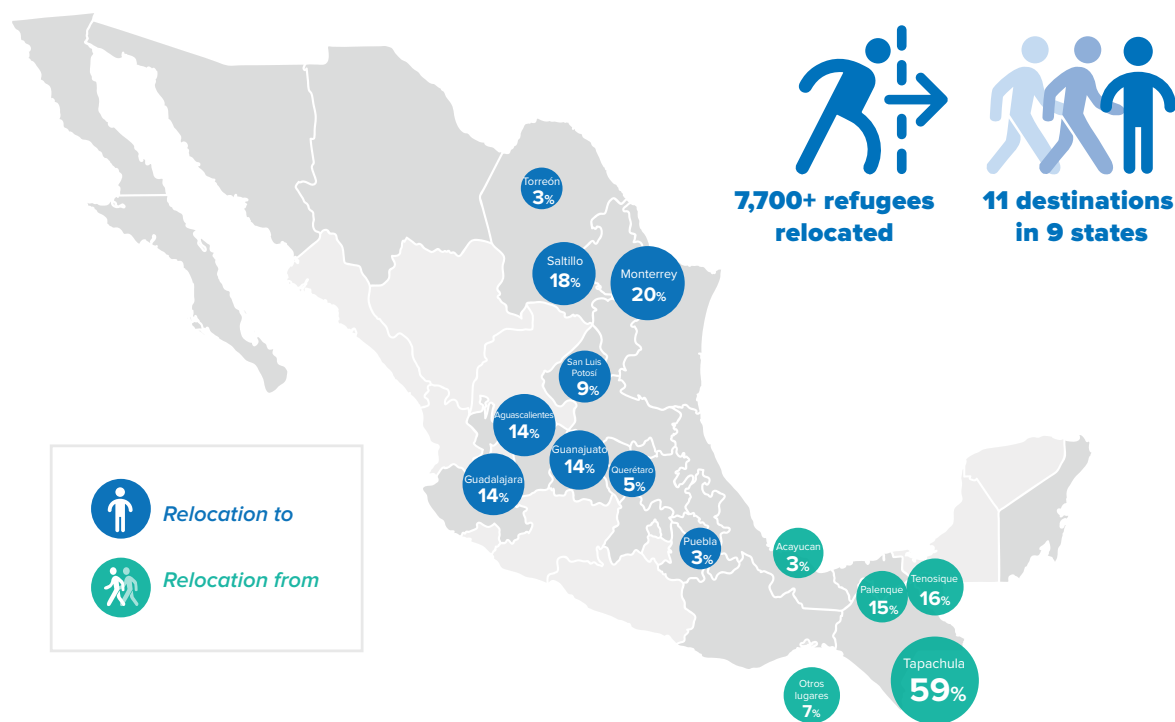

In 2021 UNHCR continued its advocacy efforts to eliminate barriers to refugees' integration, including in relation to financial inclusion, access to documentation, hiring procedures, and access to national education and health systems. Following the progressive reactivation of the economy and the increasing demand for labour force, UNHCR focused on creating bridges between the refugee population and the gaps in the Mexican labour market, thus supporting the needs of national industries and enabling refugees to contribute to the economy. As asylum applications increased, emphasis was placed on ensuring that our programmes became increasingly flexible to process larger numbers and diverse profiles, especially the most vulnerable refugees and asylum seekers such as survivors of gender-based violence, non-Spanish speaking refugees, single-headed households, and people with disabilities, among others.

Relocation and integration in situ

With over 7,700 refugees having benefited from relocation and job placement under UNHCR’s Local Integration Programme (LIP), 2021 was the year with the highest number of relocations since the start of the programme. Launched for the first time in Saltillo in 2016, the programme has been since extended to 11 locations across the country, including to Irapuato, Silao, and Torreón in 2021. Cumulatively, as of the end of December, over 16,000 refugees have been successfully relocated from cities in southern Mexico where integration opportunities are scarce, to municipalities located in the industrial corridor in the centre and north of the country, known for its demands for workforce and its absorption capacity in the education and health sectors.

Data collected through a new monitoring system developed by UNHCR shows that within the first six months of their integration process, refugee families became independent from financial assistance provided by UNHCR. 87 per cent of beneficiaries of working age had found a job, reducing the number of unemployed refugees by 60 per cent compared to their situation before relocation. The percentage of refugee children not enrolled in school decreased from 82 per cent to 10 per cent. Refugees’ access to a bank account doubled, from 29 per cent to 59 per cent. The percentage of cases with income below the Income Poverty Line was reduced from 54 per cent prior to relocation, to 12 per cent six months into the programme.

In situ integration mechanism complemented the relocation programme. Since the beginning of 2021, UNHCR's partner International Rescue Committee (IRC) has been responsible for implementing specific integration support, referred as EAPI (Equipos de Acompañamiento para la Protección e Integración), which provides individualized follow-up (home visits) and assistance to asylum seekers and refugees in the following cities: Acayucan, Mexico City, Palenque, Tapachula, Tenosique, Tijuana and Villahermosa. From May to December 2021, the EAPIs supported almost 19,000 people and referred a third of them to specialised services.

To support integration, UNHCR strengthened collaboration with key federal and state level actors, in particular National Employment Service (SNE). Three secondments funded by UNHCR allowed SNE to train employees across the country and streamline the inclusion of refugees and asylum seekers into information materials and programs at national level. 2021 was also a year of success in terms of expanding UNHCR's network of private sector companies that offer employment opportunities to refugees and asylum seekers. 110 new companies started hiring refugees in 2021, summing up to 260 companies cooperating with the programme. Some companies proactively approached UNHCR, indicating that they increasingly see benefits of contributing to the efforts conducted alongside UNHCR. They further highlight that their refugee employees bring strong motivation and dedication, and, for some, a decrease in turnover figures within their companies.

Video: Local Integration Program in Guadalajara

As the Local Integration Programme rolled-out throughout the year, UNHCR launched new initiatives to reach out to more vulnerable populations. Progress was made towards the identification and inclusion in early-care programs of children in single-parent households, so as to facilitate parents' employment. In response to the barriers faced by LGBTIQ+ refugees, four relocation cities identified opportunities for the inclusion and availability of additional services through specialized organizations. Furthermore, UNHCR created specialized services for people with physical disabilities. Efforts were also made to promote shelters as spaces for integration, and to strengthen referral pathways to the Local Integration Programme.

Finally, in response to the sudden large-scale arrival of Haitians from March onwards, integration support for this group became a priority. This resulted in innovative initiatives set up to facilitate local integration of non-Spanish speaking refugees and asylum seekers through Spanish-language classes. Among others, it is worth noting the new relocation and inclusion pilot project, undertaken jointly with IOM, and in coordination with the Mexican Government, for Haitian nationals who have not applied for asylum.

Simplifying financial inclusion of refugees

Despite a favourable legal framework for financial inclusion, some banks continued to question migratory documents issued to refugees by INM as valid documents for the opening of bank accounts. This resulted in difficulties for refugees to access financial services and affected their employability. To address this problem, in 2021 UNHCR created a specific working group, held regular bilateral meetings with different management levels and technical areas within financial institutions and supported the organization of a MIRPS technical table on financial inclusion, led by COMAR and the National Employment Service. As a result, several major banks in Mexico are now favourable to expanding their services to refugees and asylum seekers. Banorte is one of the banks that already accept immigration documents to open accounts online.

Access to education

Owing to COVID-19 pandemic, schools in Mexico were closed from March 2020 to August 2021, limiting learning opportunities at all levels. Nevertheless, UNHCR led a series of initiatives that sought to promote access to education for the children of asylum seekers and refugees within the government's "Back to School" strategy. Information campaigns to promote the return to school of asylum seeking and refugee children were carried out in cooperation with the Ministry of Education, COMAR and our partner Programa Casa Refugiados (PCR), with messages emphasizing that their enrollment can be done at any moment of the year and without identity documents or academic certificates. Cash assistance programs were also scaled-up for the most vulnerable families to support their children's school attendance.

In the framework of the project supported by Educate a Child, 671 out-of-school children and adolescents received financial support for their enrolment in the national education system and 162 were admitted to the accelerated program for over-aged learners at primary education levels. Additionally, 424 teachers from primary schools in the southern states of Mexico were trained to facilitate the enrollment of asylum seeking and refugee children in schools and to recognize their diplomas.

Throughout the year, UNHCR continued its support for young refugees to pursue their studies beyond compulsory schooling levels. To date, more than 250 refugee students received UNHCR scholarships to pursue higher education, of which 177 students came from Venezuela. In 2021, 35 new Albert Einstein German Academic Refugee Initiative (DAFI) scholarships were allocated to refugee students, amounting to 58 young refugees having benefited from the DAFI programme in Mexico.

The recognition of foreign diplomas was resumed in February 2021, after almost a year, through an online procedure. UNHCR supported 181 people to obtain the recognition of their diplomas to increase their job placement opportunities.

Moreover, an innovative tertiary education alternative pathway was formalized during the visit of High Commissioner Filippo Grandi in November 2021. The programme, co-signed by SRE, SEGOB and our partner Proyecto Habesha, will provide 100 refugees and asylum seekers residing outside the country with complementary pathways to access higher education in Mexico. Upon arrival, refugee students will receive refugee status, and asylum seekers will have the opportunity to apply for asylum in Mexico, granting them access to permanent legal status in the country.

Spanish classes for asylum seekers in Tapachula

Jasmine and Baptiste* fled Haiti a year ago because their family was at risk. Jasmine left her three children to begin a long journey to Mexico, where she claimed asylum. Upon her arrival, Jasmine suffered from not understanding Spanish and not being understood. “I need to speak more Spanish. I have three children in Haiti. I need to find a job to bring my family here”, she said. Baptiste experienced something similar. He spoke a little Spanish before coming to Mexico, but wasn’t fluent enough.

Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Spanish classes taught at the Autonomous University of Chiapas (UNACH) to non-Spanish-speaking asylum seekers and refugees were suspended. UNHCR and the community centre known as Territorio Joven - managed by the Secretary of Youth and Sports of Tapachula - started a new programme where young university volunteers teach Spanish to asylum seekers. The project began on 1 March of 2021. In its first phase, 131 people signed up. They were mainly from Haiti, but also Cameroon, Guinea, the Democratic Republic of Congo, and Sierra Leone. During the second phase of the pilot, an additional 191 asylum seekers took the classes and became more proficient in Spanish.

Guillermo, venezuelan refugee, studies mechanic engineering at UNAM, in Mexico City, thanks to the DAFI scholarship.

Education opportunities for young refugees in México

“I always knew I wanted to be an engineer. Someday I would like to work in aeronautics. Now I am a student of Electrical Mechanical Engineering at UNAM, Mexico’s biggest public university. I wasn’t planning to come to study in Mexico, but once I had to flee my country, I had no choice”.

20 year-old Guillermo and his family left Venezuela in 2018, shortly after the 2017 protests began. “Mérida, the city where we lived is full of students; many engaged in the riots. The repression was very harsh. My siblings are asthmatic, it was really tough to be locked up all day, hiding from tear gas”.

After seeking asylum, his mother started the enrolment process for Guillermo to study at UNAM. After two years of trying and preparing to be accepted, he received the good news: “As soon as I saw my name on the paper, Guillermo Andrés Barrios Rojas, I called my mum to share the news: “I am accepted in university!”. We were all very happy and excited, this is the biggest university in Latin America, Mexico’s “maxima house of studies”. Thanks to the DAFI scholarship, an initiative implemented by UNHCR in Mexico, private and governmental donors, Guillermo was given the chance to study and make a change for himself and his family. “I am thankful to the donors because they are investing in education, and this is a bet for the future that benefits us all. I often tell other young refugees: don’t ever stop trying. As for myself, my dream is someday to be involved in the process of building airplanes”.

Additional efforts were also made in primary education, despite the pandemic. This is the case of 8 year-old Javier, who sits at an improvised desk in his home, as he finishes one of his distance learning classes. Javier uses a laptop to connect to online classes. He and his classmates attend in-person school three days a week and connect from home on the two other days. Javier's family also arrived in Mexico in 2018, after having fled the precarious situation in Venezuela. They made great efforts to survive in their home country, but they lacked basic services such as food, water, health and education.

Javier is part of some 1,200 refugee children in Mexico who are now enrolled in primary school, thanks to the support of local authorities, UNHCR and the Educate A Child (EAC) Programme. The programme is in its first year of implementation in Mexico and is seeing considerable success.

"I like to study again because I learn new things, and I can achieve my dreams and have a house. I want to become a car mechanic", says Javier.

Naturalization

As confirmed by participatory assessments undertaken with different population groups, most refugees consider naturalization as key to their long-term integration. Nevertheless, the naturalization procedure has been suspended since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic in March 2020. UNHCR has identified approximately 500 refugees who are eligible and aspire to become Mexican citizens. In collaboration with our NGO partner Sin Fronteras, we have been working towards establishing a pilot project that would receive requests from refugees through an ad-hoc procedure of verification, starting early 2022.

The first Haitian Family relocated thanks to the joint UNHCR and IOM labour insertion and integration project

IOM and UNHCR join efforts as part of a labour insertion and integration project to support Haitian nationals

In the context of the increased mixed and secondary movements and the arrival of people from Haiti in 2021, UNHCR set up several initiatives to assist this specific group. A profiling exercise was conducted in various cities across Mexico including Tapachula, Monterrey and Mexico City. Results of the exercise indicated that 80 per cent of participants wanted to be employed and 90 per cent were interested in integrating in Mexico. 80 per cent of those taking part in the survey indicated to have at least one family member who spoke Spanish and 87 per cent of participants indicated having a family member who reads and writes in Spanish.

However, the impossibility to return to Haiti together with the lack of legal alternatives to remain in the country has resulted in thousands of individuals filing for applications for asylum. As a direct consequence, the asylum system in Mexico became overloaded and frictions with the first communities of reception in Chiapas and Tabasco exacerbated. To tackle these difficulties, UNHCR and IOM presented a pilot project with the aim of generating viable legal protection alternatives for Haitian nationals who have evident humanitarian needs owing to the current situation in their country of origin or the countries of previous residence. Approved by the Intersecretarial Commission for Comprehensive Care in Migratory Matters (CIAIMM), the project will begin in 2022 with the following mechanisms:

1. Inclusion of Haitians already present in Mexico in the UNHCR Local Integration Programme

The first mechanism consists of identifying eligible Haitian families with at least one Spanish-speaking member of working age (25-49 years old) in Tapachula, with skills to enter the formal labour market, and willing to be relocated within the framework of the Local Integration Programme to Puebla or San Luis Potosí.

IOM, the Agency responsible for identifying the profiles of participants, is in charge of Spanish language courses and of the preparation workshops for job orientation and facilitates the issuance of Humanitarian permits (Tarjeta de Visitante por Razones Humanitarias) in coordination with INM.

UNHCR provides transportation to the cities of destination and support through its network of private sector allies in the job placement and, when relevant, insertion in schools for those Haitian families with school-age children.

The project is coordinated closely with government institutions: the SRE, the INM, the SNE, and RENAPO, with private sector partners, and with the Haitian Consulate in Mexico. In its pilot phase, it seeks to relocate 200 Haitians in 2022, with the aim to expand at the national level in 2023.

2. Inclusion of people in the existing Local Integration Programme from the country of origin

The second mechanism seeks to create migratory regularization channels for people who have humanitarian needs and relevant profiles that labour markets demands to obtain the necessary documents from their country of origin to access the employment programme in Puebla and San Luis Potosí. IOM and UNHCR will hold wide consultations before proposing a pilot to operate within the existing regulatory (visas) and institutional (consulates) framework, thus limiting irregular migration. The consultation process is to start in 2022.

Resettlement

Resettlement quotas increased fourfold in 2021, compared with 2020, however departures of refugees to their countries of resettlement were largely delayed due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Contrary to the past years when resettlement was only possible to Canada and Australia, for the first time since a small pilot scheme in 2016, Mexico also received a quota for resettlement to the United States in 2021. This allowed for more cases to be processed under the normal submission priority (82 per cent of cases) rather than the previous focus on emergency and urgent cases. In total, 163 individuals were submitted for resettlement to the United States, and 57 individuals to Canada. Half of all people submitted for resettlement were children and 54 per cent were women and girls.

76 CASES submitted for resettlement to third countries

To meet the needs of the increasing caseload, UNHCR implemented a plan to assist resettlement cases in finding and accessing - albeit temporarily - protection or integration in Mexico, specifically by relocating them from southern states to Puebla and Guadalajara as part of the Local Integration Programme. Cases that required further psychosocial support and/or sheltered care continued to be relocated to Mexico City.

Peaceful coexistence

Promoting peaceful coexistence that contributes to the social development of the entire community where both local and displaced populations interact was one of the key objectives of UNHCR-Mexico's work in 2021. These projects aimed at fostering ownership of community-based projects and inclusive initiatives related to sport, culture, or education, and to improve infrastructure where those activities could take place. In parallel, UNHCR continued to advocate for the increased engagement of development actors in southern Mexico, the region with the lowest socioeconomic development indicators in the country and the one that in 2021 received more than 72 per cent of all asylum claims, with resulting pressures on services and host communities.

UNHCR supported the remodeling of classroom, restrooms lighting and other facilities at Fernando Montes de Oca school in Tapachula, Chiapas.

Humanitarian and development Nexus

Despite its advanced level of development, Mexico presents the greatest socioeconomic disparities among the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) countries.* In particular, the states along the southern border make up part of the regions with the lowest results in socioeconomic indicators, such as GDP per capita, health, services, housing, educational deficit, poverty, and extreme poverty. Chiapas, for example, has a GDP per capita three times lower than the Mexico national average and almost seven times lower than that of Mexico City. Comparatively speaking, it is also lower than the national average in Guatemala and El Salvador, and only moderately higher than that of Honduras. Since under Mexican law asylum seekers must remain in the state where they filed their application for asylum until a decision has been reached on the merit of their claim, the high number of asylum applications in Chiapas and Tabasco resulted in lengthened waiting times. The prolonged presence of asylum-seekers inevitably placed additional pressures on already fragile public services in these regions.

In view of the above, and additionally confronted with the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, UNHCR made significant investments in improving access and strengthening capacities of public health and education services in the states of Chiapas and Tabasco.

Solar public lighting in the South

Donations of solar public lighting have been made in different areas of the city of Tapachula to generate safer spaces in the city. UNHCR and the Municipal Department of Urban Development have worked together to identify areas with lighting needs and areas with a greater presence of the refugee population in the city. In 2020, 131 solar lights were placed in different neighborhoods of the city. In 2021, another 130 were installed to improve the safety of the population. UNHCR also installed 70 solar streetlights in 2021 in the park sector of the Pakal-Na neighborhood, in Palenque, and around the train tracks.

Solar public lighting donated by UNHCR was installed in Tenosique, Tabasco, to improve security in this city.

Organisation (WHO), donated medical equipment such as ambulances (6), emergency stretcher trolleys (6), maternal and foetal monitors (2), beds and clinical desks (45 each), mattresses for clinical beds (60), and COVID-19 prevention and mitigation material to municipal hospitals.

UNHCR also opened an opportunity to support public school in the south through donations of education materials, computers and infrastructure improvements . Priority was given to primary and secondary schools that had a significant presence of refugee and migrant children. Additionally, UNHCR donated 28,000 kits of school supplies to 116 public schools in Chiapas, Tabasco, Veracruz and Oaxaca.

Supporting host communities

Building on efforts from previous years, UNHCR prioritized support to local communities that host the highest numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers. To this end, the office set up an internal multifunctional team dedicated to providing guidance to field offices on community-based initiatives and promote peaceful coexistence with the host population

During 2021, 18 peaceful coexistence projects were developed and implemented across the country. Among them, several involved infrastructure interventions:

- improvement of a school, a library and a nursery in Saltillo;
- renovation and adaptation work to establish a community centre in Tijuana;
- renovation of a public park of Santa Catarina in the Metropolitan area of Monterrey;
- improvements of a sewage network in a street leading to the La 72 shelter in Tenosique;
- installation of 11 public drinking fountains in Tapachula;
- installation of free public WIFI antennas in the communities of Frontera Corozal, Francisco León and Emiliano Zapata in Chiapas, benefiting some 10,000 people; and
- the construction of a dome over a central square in Francisco León community, one and half hour from Frontera Corozal, which is used for community activities.

Moreover, UNHCR donated IT equipment and furniture to community centres in Tijuana and Aguascalientes to expand the scope of activities available for locals. In Tijuana, a growing Haitian population can now learn Spanish, which is key for their successful integration, while locals are also provided with Haitian Creole lessons. In the Pakal-Na neighborhood of Palenque where most asylum-seekers and refugees find a temporary home, UNHCR donated furniture, books and teaching materials to the community library, and sport equipment for the community gym.

The other initiatives included donation of musical instruments to a children's orchestra in Aguascalientes, and painting of murals in San Luis Potosí and Aguascalientes. UNHCR also organized two culinary events, where refugees and locals came together to cook and showcase the specialties of their countries.

One team: the “Union Club” together with refugees

As part of World Refugee Day celebrations, (June 20), the sports clubs of Nuevo León - Fuerza Regia, Rayados, Tigres and Sultanes - joined UNHCR to announce an extraordinary campaign: a single team - the “Union Club”, together with refugees.

As has been demonstrated the world over, sport offers the perfect platform to promote empathy with refugees. It opens a wide range of possibilities for inclusion, no matter where you come from, you are part of the same team. Sport triggers cultural exchanges and has a positive impact on individuals' psycho-emotional health and promotes social cohesion within the community.

At the age of 15, Luis, his younger sister and his mother left Honduras after a cousin was killed by gangs. When the family became victim of extortion in southern Mexico, they relocated to Aguascalientes, in the centre of the country. Today, Luis is one of the 15 refugee children who are part the municipal Jesús María Symphonic Orchestra.

People here are very friendly, they have received me very well, I have made new friends and I have learned a lot at the Music House,” said Luis.

In the course of 2021, over 25,000 children claimed asylum in Mexico. At the local level, some municipalities included refugees and asylum seekers in cultural and social projects such as this orchestra, a space shared by local children and refugees. These initiatives promote peaceful coexistence and support for host communities, which are pillars of MIRPS and the Mexico Action Plan.

Cecilia, 17, arrived in Mexico together with her siblings, fleeing threats in their home country

Honduras. She had never played an instrument before but as the daughter of a musician and the sister of a rapper, she quickly learned to play the double bass. “I was not so attracted to the double bass at the start. But now I like it very much! It’s amazing to be able to share with other refugees as well, and I’ve also made a lot of friends from different countries and parts of Mexico”, she said.

The inclusion of refugee children benefits the Orchestra, too. “I feel totally enriched with all that refugee children have brought to us. The language of music is universal, and melodies unite us all”, commented Ana María Luna Reyes, music teacher at the Jesús María Children’s Orchestra that specialized in percussion. UNHCR contributed to the initiative by donating 43 musical instruments.

Tackling xenophobia

In the course of participatory assessments undertaken with various refugee population groups in 2021, many respondents expressed having suffered from discrimination in the south of the country. Generally, people stated enjoying better relationships with local communities in cities in the north and centre of the country. In all locations, they reported some form of discrimination from employers, typically lower wages and higher workloads. Likewise, they stated having faced institutional discrimination in access to public services.

In response, an internal multifunctional team on Racism and Xenophobia was created in 2021 with a view to enhance internal coordination for the design and implementation of communication products and activities to combat discrimination. The team monitored acts of discrimination to detect tensions and identify relevant solutions at the community level. Moreover, we conducted a qualitative study to measure perceptions towards refugees in six cities, which became the basis for an anti-xenophobia campaign to be rolled out in 2022.

In 2021, UNHCR and the National Council to Prevent Discrimination (CONAPRED) jointly facilitated a series of workshops for legal service providers, COMAR officials and the staff of UNHCR partners on prevention of xenophobia and discrimination against migrants and refugees. Additionally, approximately 60 journalists participated in dedicated workshops for media professionals in Ciudad Juarez, Monterrey, Palenque, Saltillo, Tapachula and Tijuana, where they were sensitised on the use of appropriate language in their media coverage of refugees and migrants.

PALOMAZO por los Refugiados

Palomazo for Refugees 2021, Refugio Sonoro

For the second year in a row, as part of World Refugee Day (WRD) celebrations, UNHCR Mexico organised the Palomazo por los Refugiados initiative. The initiative was part of a larger festival in the Americas, the JAM Festival, which included different cultural activities to celebrate WRD in different countries. In Mexico's popular culture, a "palomazo" happens when a group of friends or musicians come together to play songs - roughly equivalent to a jam session. In Mexico, UNHCR launched "Refugio Sonoro", a 60-minute audiovisual piece that brought together the talent of six artists - Tania Libertad, Yayo González, Roco Pachukote, José Manuel Aguilera, Vivir Quintana and Irina Índigo- all of whom come from different countries in the region. Led by Colombian artist Andrea Echeverri, they performed powerful and popular Latin American songs that were related to exile, spreading messages of empathy and hope.

Palomazo for Refugees was disseminated through UNHCR's social media (Twitter, Facebook and YouTube) and through W Radio, one of the most important radio stations in Mexico, with whom we partnered on the project.

CHAPTER 7

Internal Displacement

©UNHCR/Ginnette Riquelme

During 2021, at least 29,000 people were displaced, exceeding three times the approximate number of 2020.

Violence is one of the main causes for internal displacement in Mexico. In 2019, this situation was recognized as a public human right issue.

Internal displacement represents a multidimensional situation of violation of human rights which leaves those who are forced to flee their home and stay in their country in a situation of extreme vulnerability. Although there is no official data available, according to the last annual report of the Mexican Commission for the Defense and Promotion of Human Rights (CMDPDH), some 356,792 people were internally displaced between 2006 and 2020 in massive events caused by violence. CMDPDH monthly media monitoring reports, show that from January to December 2021, at least 29,000 people were displaced, a threefold increase compared to 2020. The main causes of displacement were violence and organized crime in states such as Chihuahua, Michoacán, Guerrero and Sinaloa, and intercommunity conflicts in Chiapas and Oaxaca.

Since 2019, when the Mexican Government recognized internal forced displacement as a public and human rights problem at national level, UNHCR has been providing support to the government through technical assistance on legal and institutional framework. A draft law on the protection of IDPs was unanimously approved by the Chamber of Deputies in September 2020 and awaits further discussion and approval in the Senate. In 2021, the first profiling exercise continued in Chihuahua state and UNHCR supported the analytical work of an inter-institutional Working Group composed of authorities, civil society organizations, and the Joint IDP Profiling Service (JIPS) to gain a better understanding of the phenomenon. UNHCR also provided a financial support to the National Institute of Statistics and Geography (INEGI) for the collection and qualitative analysis of information during the months of November and December. In August, UNHCR participated in the Seminar on Forced Internal Displacement, organized by the Migration Policy, Registration and Identity of Persons Unit of the SEGOB.

At the request of authorities, UNHCR also worked on the implementation of pilot projects for the inclusion of vulnerable displaced Mexican nationals within the UNHCR Local Integration Programme. In 2021, 65 people were identified and referred to UNHCR by the General Directorate for Welfare (former INDESOL), and 26 individuals affected by forced displacement in Guerrero were referred by SEGOB. It is expected that these pilots can provide a basis for development of public policy in this area.

In 2021, UNHCR contributed to capacity-building of authorities on the subject of protection of internally displaced people. In September, 43 officials of the Attorney General's Office of Chihuahua state completed a full-fledged training on internal displacement. In November and December, a group of 15 representatives of authorities at federal and state level and civil society leaders took part in the sixth edition of the Internal Displacement course provided by the International Institute of Humanitarian Law in San Remo, based in Italy. UNHCR support allowed for this course to be conducted in Spanish.

At the request of The Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation UNHCR, together with the ICRC, provided technical assistance for the development of the "Manual on Internal Displacement" that will serve as a guide to the Judicial Power of the Federation. Moreover, on the request of and together with the Migration Policy Unit Registry and Identity of Persons (UPMRIP), UNHCR launched an analysis of the legislative framework in force at the federal level, in relation to the directives on comprehensive care and protection of people in a situation of internal forced displacement. Both documents will be published during 2022 and will provide significant input to the debate on internal displacement in Mexico.

In parallel developments, a dedicated Working Group on Forced Internal Displacement was established under the UN Inter-agency group on Migration and Asylum (GIMA) with the aim to strengthen an UN-wide response to internal displacement, capitalizing on the expertise of different agencies. UNHCR leads the working group on IDPs and has secured the co-leadership of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in line with both Agencies' mandates.
