

As the Syria crisis entered its seventh year in March, the number of Syrian refugees in the region passed the five million mark. There are now almost 2.97 million Syrian refugees registered refugees in Turkey, over 1 million in Lebanon, some 658,000 in Jordan, almost 237,000 in Iraq and above 120,000 in Egypt, indicating the generosity of countries across the region.

The total net increase since 1 January 2017 is 189,097 refugees, mostly due to registration of Syrian refugees who had already been residing in Turkey. This indicates that, despite the ongoing violence inside Syria, few Syrians are currently able to reach neighbouring countries, illustrating the ongoing management of borders across the region. Humanitarian partners call for respect of basic rights, protection and physical security of all populations, including those stranded at borders.

Nearly, 48 per cent of the Syrian refugee population are children, and 49 per cent are adult. 3RP Partners have established a regional strategic age and gender sensitive approach for preventing and responding to SGBV and child protection that prioritizes the promotion of gender equality in national legislation as well as in humanitarian programming. The approach aims at strengthening national systems and capacity to support SGBV survivors, promoting community-based initiatives within a coordinated inter-agency response. Efforts are in place to the improvement of data collection and analysis to ensure this response remains grounded in evidence.
