Leyla Welkin, Ph.D., LMHC is the originator of the Helping the Helpers project, serving as primary content provider for all iterations of the project. She is a cross-cultural psychologist and psychosocial group facilitator, working on an international level through her consulting organization, the Pomegranate Connection.

Leyla’s inspiration for the project came during a period of work in her birthplace along the Turkish border with Syria. While she lived in Turkey working with Turkish survivors of sexual assault, the war in Syria began and hundreds of thousands of Syrians were invited by Turkish authorities to take refuge in camps along the border.

Leyla began to support traumatized Syrian asylum seekers but quickly realized that systematic approaches to trauma informed care were completely absent in the camps. Many camp employees and volunteers were well-meaning but completely unprepared for the scope and scale of the systematic violence experienced by the refugees.

She began to draft the earliest curriculum of what would become the Helping the Helpers project, a training to support those caring for traumatized people to understand symptoms of trauma in others and themselves. The overall goal has remained focused on creating an informed, sustainable, caring and welcoming intercultural network.

Testimonial from QCEA Helping the Helpers program 2018-2019

“After a mere four years of work and a completely non-existent self-care plan, I was unaware that I was going through severe stress, suffering from vicarious trauma and close to burning out. I had difficulty concentrating, felt depressed and was generally struggling in my everyday life to continue with my work. In the constant bustle and stress I felt I had no time to process all the experiences that I had gone through and had no tools to protect myself from the difficulties faced in the fieldwork.

Now I feel stronger and better able to face the challenges to come. I have become aware of the dangerous patterns to avoid in our line of work and understand the crucial importance to set stronger work and emotional boundaries to protect myself. Together with the rest of the group, our combined strength and knowledge became one of the most healing processes I have ever gone through. I don’t know how to thank Helping the Helpers, the donors and all the participants for the thriving setting that was created that has truly changed my life.”
Development of Helping the Helpers Program

• Humanitarian workers increasingly recognize the need for Trauma Awareness and Trauma-Informed Care.

• First HtH was organized as a short term, international grassroots volunteer program in 2016 in Italy.

• 12 participants in a 5-day program from Italy, Turkey and UK.
Development of Helping the Helpers Program

Based on strong interest and feedback from the first program, Pomegranate Connection in collaboration with the Quaker Council for European Affairs built a year-long pilot program completed in September 2019.

- 9 participants from Belgium, UK, Greece, Turkey, Ireland, Palestine, and Australia.
- 3 residential training in UK and Belgium with online supervision
- 4 trainers and 1 psychological supervisor
