4. Presentation of Regional Gender Analysis by Rebeca Acin, UN Women and Camille Gervais (CRR)

The regional analysis was designed to consolidate secondary analyses from Ukraine and neighboring countries, including Hungary, Moldova, Poland, Romania and Slovakia with the aim of:

- Analysing emerging regional trends
- Consolidating the evidence base
- Developing practical recommendations

The area of inquiry included:

1. Participation and leadership of women-led organisations (WLOs), women’s rights organisations (WROs), women and marginalised groups.
   - Women’s roles as volunteers and first responders have not adequately translated into their meaningful participation and leadership in decision making processes.
   - Low level and poor quality of funding for WROs and WLO. There is a need for sustainable, flexible funding for local civil society organizations focused on GBV and SRHR.
   - Donors focus on funding humanitarian response while pre-war needs still remain and are key element in generating the challenges facing refugees.
   - Range of challenges in engagement in UN humanitarian coordination structures, including challenges in outreach, language barriers, limitations of current structures.

2. Prevention, mitigation and response to gender-based violence (GBV)

• GBV was already widespread and increasing in Ukraine and highly prevalent in the region before the escalation of the war.

• Insufficient available information, to allow an accurate representation of the full spectrum of risks and intersecting forms of violence that individuals experience.

• Gaps in the current operational response: application of minimum standards for GBV risk mitigation in collective shelters in Ukraine.

• Shelters and accommodations in refugee-hosting countries (particularly private accommodation), as well as a lack of risk analysis at border and transit sites.

• The review highlighted the need to ensure that all survivors of violence have safe access to quality GBV services and survivor-centred care.

• PSEA remains a concern

3. Access to and availability and enjoyment of sexual and reproductive health and rights (SRHR)

• In Ukraine: attacks on medical facilities and disruptions in health system functioning and supply chains continue to impact access to sexual and reproductive health care

• In a number of border countries a range of legal and policy barriers are now intersecting with needs of refugee populations and undermining access to sexual and reproductive health care, including for survivors of GBV.

• Access to good quality SRH is being affected by a range of factors in border countries and specific groups are facing particular barriers.

• Ensuring the prioritisation of SRHR in the humanitarian and refugee response still remains challenging.

• Most of the direct response to the SRHR needs of refugees is being led by local women’s rights and SRHR civil society organizations, in difficult operating environments.
4. Intersectionality of gender and diversity factors affecting the multiple and intersecting challenges faced by women, girls, boys and men.

- The review shows that references to intersectional analysis are limited.
- Most reports include an examination of gender, that is based on certain categories for women and men, which contributes to create homogenous groups overlooking intersections with other identities.
- Use of “vulnerable”, “most vulnerable” and “most at risk” persons without providing criteria for such categorization.
- Lack of clarity about how to systematically collect and analyse data regarding intersectional identities to guide specific sector programming within the humanitarian response.
- In general, the analyses adopt single identities as the source of exclusion and discrimination.
