

Rainwater storage system for Yukpa indigenous families, Sierra de Perijá, Zulia state. ©UNHCR Venezuela

As Venezuela continues to be mired in a political and constitutional crisis following the 10 January presidential inauguration, UNHCR looks back at what was achieved during 2024. Last year was characterized by restrictions to humanitarian access, extreme political polarization and a violent aftermath to the 28 July presidential elections that led to the emergence of new community protection needs, new protection profiles and a renewed operational focus on tackling the cycle of displacement affecting the country, and the región as a whole. The Operation spearheaded community resilience and returnee reintegration initiatives with implementing partners, other UN agencies, local authorities and private sector allies, providing support to vulnerable Venezuelans determined to remain in the country and sustainable options for those who return to Venezuela. Despite the difficulties, return population movements identified by UNHCR showed a moderate increase compared to 2023, registering a 4/6 returns/exits ratio, providing further stimulus and encouragement to UNHCR's efforts to tackle the social, economic and environmental drivers of displacement in Venezuela.

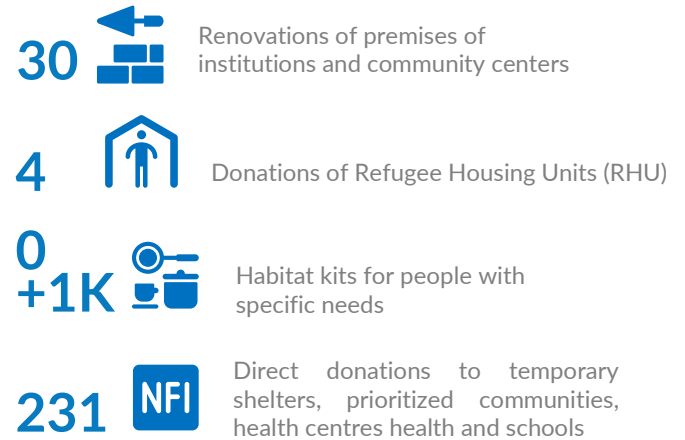

KEY Figures

Protection

Shelter, Energy and NFIs

Emergency response and prevention

