Next school year - Challenges ahead...

The changing situation

1. Only a maximum 33,000 enrolled Syrian students will be accepted in first shift
 - 25,000 under government payment
 - 7,000 additional if paid for by the UN and partners

Students already enrolled are being sent out pending the start of second shifts

2. The second shift has not yet started as MEHE has not clarified the SOPs. They have identified only 50 schools for now. UNHCR has agreed to support up to 70 schools.

3. MEHE is stating that NFE can not take place in schools anymore as it should be only for second shifts

This creates difficulties in finding venues for NFE and ensuring continuity for students with bridges into formal schools and compromises the work of NGO that have started working months ago, building relationship and trust with school personnel and families

Ways forward

Joint UNICEF/UNHCR advocacy efforts to:

1. Ensure an enrolment of at least 30% Syrians in schools with capacity
2. Ensure that students that have already enrolled will not be sent expelled
3. Maximize students enrolment second shifts and not spread too thinly over many schools (stick to the 50 signed off by the Minister)
4. Increase enrolment in subsidized formal education
5. Non-formal education will become a bigger part of the response both in schools and in communities
6. Increase support to host communities by providing school supplies to all 300 000 students in public schools
