In 2017, promoting access to safety remains a core focus of coordinated advocacy and protection efforts. Borders continue to be managed, with the increase in the number of registered Syrian refugees in late 2016 arising from those who were already present in the region coming forward to seek registration.

With 84 per cent of Syrian refugees residing in urban, peri-urban and rural settings, 3RP partners continue to expand community-based approaches to protection as a strategic component for empowering communities and delivering protection services. This approach calls for meaningful engagement with communities in all stages of the protection response process.

With children representing nearly half of all registered Syrian refugees, child protection remains a core component of the protection sector response, with child marriage and child labour emerging as areas of intervention across 3RP countries.

The protection response continue to prioritize the prevention of and response to sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) through a range of interagency initiatives focused on reaching all SGBV survivors and persons at risk of SGBV.

The Food Security Sector is committed to maintaining targeted programmes for direct food access for the most vulnerable. The Sector recognizes that food assistance is a pre-requisite and necessary enabler to increase resilience programming that promotes dietary diversity, supports sustainable food production and improves livelihoods and employment opportunities. However, the sector also recognizes the need to focus on livelihoods in order to provide opportunities for creating a win-win situation for Syrian refugees and host communities, with investment in the agriculture sector offering opportunities to enhance the productivity and competitiveness of agricultural value chains and to improve the livelihoods of farming communities while, at the same time, creating temporary employment opportunities.

The Food Security Sector will continue to advocate for a coordinated and evidence-based response, using regular assessments and refinement to ensure responsiveness to changing needs. Working through partnerships between agencies, host governments, and the private sector, the strategy will prioritize the dignity and self-reliance of affected populations, while focusing on mainstreaming gender and protection concerns throughout.

The overarching goal of the education sector is to ensure access to safe, equitable and quality education for children and youth and to strengthen the capacity of education systems to deliver an effective, coordinated and evidence-based education response.

Key strategic shifts that relate to the education policy environment, access and quality of education are taking place in the five host countries to effectively address the education challenges resulting from the Syria crisis.

In terms of access, learning spaces will be expanded and maximized including through the formalization of second shifts and investments in new technologies. Access strategies will also include enhanced focus on learning at the post-basic level and a more systematic targeting of youth aged 15-17.

In relation to quality education, life skills and citizenship education will be promoted as an integral part of formal and non-formal provision for all age groups and grades. At the system level, the policy development, planning and sector coordination capacity of education systems will continue to be strengthened at both national and sub-national levels.

Demand for health services from Syrian refugees continues to place a large burden on national health systems across the region. The focus of the 3RP health strategy is twofold; strengthening the capacity of public health infrastructure to cope with the large caseload of Syrian refugees, and providing direct and targeted support to the most vulnerable populations who lack access to critical health services.

The response plan spans a range of activities from direct interventions that ensure the short-term critical needs of Syrian refugees are met to support for primary, secondary, and tertiary health services both in camps and in urban, peri-urban and rural area as well as systematic investments that reinforce the capacity of national health systems. Increasing access to reproductive and new-born health services, routine immunization, trauma and rehabilitation, and care for the disabled, mental health, outbreak control, management of non-communicable diseases and nutrition services are priority areas of intervention. Building robust health information systems and logistics networks that include Syrian refugees are also key to ensuring the health response continues to be as needs-based as possible. Equitable access to quality and continuous care regardless of refugee status is also a critical component of the health sector strategy.

The continued strategic priority for the Sector is to provide assistance to meet the ongoing basic needs of Syrian refugees, based on a multi-sectoral household profiling and identification methodology, specific to each country.

The Sector continues to aim to provide assistance to the poorest populations to ensure that they can meet their survival needs in a manner that allows choice and promotes dignity.

Basic domestic items will be provided as well as replacement items for refugees who have been living in camps for long periods of time. The sector will focus on scaling up cash assistance, including regular monthly assistance as well as ensuring wide coverage with seasonal assistance.

The Basic Needs Sector aims to strengthen the capacities and resilience of local governance through development of simplified service delivery standards, provision of required equipment and skills development.

The Shelter Sector priority remains to ensure adequate, affordable and sustainable housing options, primarily for refugees living in urban, peri-urban and rural areas, but also for vulnerable host community members. The Sector continues to move towards support to refugees in urban locations being based upon the inter-agency vulnerability analysis of families.

The aim is to improve access to adequate dwellings through maintenance or improvement to the standard of shelters across the region. Living conditions within temporary settlements and poor urban areas with high ratios of displaced population and vulnerable groups will continue to be improved. Upgrading of sub-standard housing will be undertaken through an integrated approach, involving multiple sectors.

For refugees in camps, the Sector focuses on rehabilitation efforts to improve camp infrastructure and upgrade shelters, contributing to sustainable living.

The overarching goal of the WASH Sector in the coming two years is to enhance more sustainable and cost-effective WASH services for the Syrians living in camps/settlements and having more efficient, cost-effective and equity-driven service providers in areas with significant proportion of Syrians living in host communities.

At camp level: completing transition to permanent and sustainable water, sanitation and waste management solutions when possible; ensuring standards are met particularly related to quantity, quality, privacy, dignity, security, and WASH for vulnerable people and people with special needs; improving financial and environmental sustainability of services; defining a good service balance between private sector, government, NGOs, while emphasizing and empowering self-services provided by the community themselves.

At urban service level: support service providers in their adaptation to increased service demand through capacity strengthening and service delivery (upgrading and expanding service coverage and improving service efficiencies). At the system and governance levels, the WASH partners will contribute to policy development, planning, sector coordination, information and M&E systems, with focus on equity and strengthening of local resilience.

The livelihoods sector aims to 1) provide skills development (include language training) to refugees and host community populations to increase their employability, 2) create job opportunities through enabling a better business climate, 3) support livelihoods programmes in other sectors and 4) promote social cohesion/stability.

Specifically, livelihoods support includes short-term employment opportunities (cash-for-work) through improving community infrastructure and agriculture activities; employment of Syrian health and education professionals to serve their own communities; provision of job training and creation of job placement systems; business stimulation through local contracting and procurement; market analysis and value chain development; and advocacy for workers' rights.

Social cohesion initiatives target communities/municipalities to improve the basic service provisions to both host and refugees residing in the area; conduct dialogue, mutual understanding, and conflict management training as well as enhance sensitive community policing, improve communication and develop the leadership skills of local leaders.
