

From 11 to 18 December 2023, as part of the protection monitoring activities, 24 households were interviewed at the Adré entry points. The number of interviews conducted this week brings the total number of households interviewed to 6,554 as of 18 December 2023, all of them in 16 localities in the provinces of Ouaddaï, Wadi-Fira and Sila. The main trends observed confirm those of previous weeks:

93% of the households interviewed said they did not experience any difficulty in accessing the country of asylum, but 13% revealed that they had been victims of physical assault on the Sudanese side during their flight to Chad. 24% of households interviewed indicated that part of their family members have remained in Sudan and will travel to Chad once the situation allows.

89% of households have children who were in school in Sudan and out of 136,649 registered new arrivals, 49% are of school age, 51% of whom are girls.

With regard to documentation, 46% of households claimed having no documents, 32% have identity cards or other types of identity documents and 22% have birth certificates.

34% of households interviewed said they did not feel safe when going to collect firewood or water because of the risk of exposure to gender-based violence.

56% of households said they do not intend to return to Sudan even if the situation improves in the coming months and 72% said they feel safe and integrated thanks to good cohabitation with the host communities. Interviewees who do not yet feel integrated invoked reasons related to possible tensions arising from the additional pressure on the existing scarce resources (36%) but also the risks of repercussions of the intercommunal tensions in Chad (44%).
